

HIGHBANKS' STYLE

Giving back to the community in style

Being a young mom taking care of children when you're not much older than a kid yourself can be a really challenging — if not dire — life circumstance. There are a lot of admirable institutions in the city that give support to these women, one of these is the Highbanks Society.

Nine years ago, I volunteered for a charity event called Designers' Showcase, in support of the Highbanks Society. Highbanks is an amazing local organization creating subsidized housing for young mothers who need support while finishing their education and creating a career path.

A few months back I received another call from Highbanks Society President Bette Mitchell, asking me if I would like to participate in helping design a suite for the expansion of their building in West Hillhurst. Knowing what an amazing organization it was, and all the great work they have been doing, I, of course, said "yes".

After a few weeks of planning and collecting donations from suppliers, the building came together beautifully and the end result was a fun, energized 600-square-foot space that will hopefully help a young woman on her way. This month I want to share with you how each space was designed and the inspiration behind the suite. >>

LIVING ROOM/KITCHEN

Being a small space, and open concept, I wanted to keep the living room and kitchen area bright and airy. The look has a mid-century feel and is inspired with a touch of whimsy to keep it young and fresh. The eco-friendly bamboo floors added an organic touch and were carried throughout the house. The space is small, so carrying the same flooring throughout helped to create flow.

In the living room, we chose to install sheer, floor to ceiling draperies that spanned the entire wall to create softness. There was room for a substantially sized sofa and a side chair for extra seating.

The kitchen's high gloss, white cabinets were chosen for durability and for their sheen, perfect for a small space. For a big punch of colour, we added the gorgeous blue mosaic tiles on the backsplash in keeping with the fresh approach to the space.

KID'S ROOM

If you read my article last month, you know that I like to keep kids' rooms neutral and simple with colour being introduced through artwork and accessories. A gorgeous mid-century inspired walnut dresser grounds the space and adds functional storage. The sheer drapery is carried in this space to create softness and unify the home. The crib is kept white, as is the chair. We chose a fun polka dot for the bedding and added a smaller pillow on the chair to repeat the pattern. The artwork is bold and contemporary—as is the light fixture—but still young and bright.

MOM'S ROOM

We wanted to create a retreat. We kept the warm grey walls that we used in other rooms but injected splashes of purple to keep the space feminine. To keep costs down we did one of my favourite DIY projects and used groupings of artwork in lieu of spending on a headboard, something that can be easily changed in time. The chrome and black side tables scale perfectly in this small space and help to create balance and symmetry. The lamps too are smaller and have a reflective base in an antiqued look.

BATHROOM

Function was key but we also wanted to create a spa-like atmosphere. A deep soaker tub was used to help mom relax after a hectic day and set on a modern 12" x 24" ceramic tile: durable and easy to clean. The tub surround is a small-scale rectangular white tile to keep the smaller bathroom bright and airy. Repeating the high gloss white for the vanity and the Caesarstone counter tops, aided in keeping the bathroom light and with consistency. The mirror goes from the top of the counter all the way to ceiling with the light fixture installed on top of the mirror so that more light is reflected. It has been my pleasure to work with the Highbanks Society and I hope that whomever is chosen to stay there feels inspired to take on the world! CL
